"BIG BERTHAS" NOT

Paris, Oct. 2.—'Guns are guns, but they're not necessarily big Berthas.'"
This evidently has been the reasoning of the German war office with regard to the long range guns used for bombarding Paris during the latter stage of the war. The Berliner Tageblatt quotes Maj. Trepper, formerly of the war ministry, as saying:

"Article 6 of the peace treaty refers only to two big heavy guns, so ft was left to the Germans to decide upon the sort of guns they would delver. If the French want to know where the Berthas are, they can be told that they are well hidden and guarded in our fortresses on the coast."
